INTRODUCTION

Gone Mexico, the first series of the [gone] project, is the result of a month of travelling from the Yucatan region to Oaxaca, where the two photographers explore the complex and dynamic aspects of collaborating, which in photography dates back to the late 1970s, when artists such as Fischli and Weiss dedicated their artistic careers to discovering the different aspects of collaboration.

Fugger and Pimenta explore the intimate 'face-a-face' encounter through their lenses, by sidestepping the semiotic stereotype of Mexican traditional culture; and bringing significant curatorial endeavor to the project by questioning their relationship, acknowledging their differences and opening up a space for a visual dialogue between them.

The series offers a reflection of the volatile nature of borders and cultures while providing a seamless journey through unknown grounds with emotional intensity and an awe to spirituality. The fragmentary nature of the series, its concentration into micro-narratives, lays the foundations for Fugger and Pimenta's future practice, both driven by a desire to tell a story in every picture they take, they managed to successfully create a recognizable style, which combines identity, humor and emotional honesty through their own deliberate removal from all potential documentary content.

Anastasia Fugger

Anastasia was raised in between the U.S and Germany and has travelled extensively throughout her life, with the c amera always at her side.

Torn between her two passions of taking pictures and understanding the biology of animals, she decided to study Behavioural Biology at the University of St.Andrews in Scotland.

Since then, Anastasia has tried to capture moments of beauty wherever she goes. Her photography spans from landscapes in Mexico to capturing the cultures of Burma and the underwater world in South Africa.
